

Chinese from before war Japanese school in China A study of the historical sociology about the alumnus network construction

RYO SATO

A purpose of this report is to consider alumnus network construction and the background at the daytime in the post-colonialism times for the Chinese alumnus who went to the Chinese Japanese school before the war. There were many Japanese schools in China, and the Chinese of the well off and the elite went before the war. However, their viewpoint changes greatly and, with Japanese defeat, becomes a cooperator to Japan. It is an important problem, and the issue of postwar processing of the collaborationist should be interpreted in context of the post-colonialism in after the war social reorganization. I consider how a Chinese alumnus was concerned in after the war social reorganization by this report with Japan and Chinese both nations.

I I inspect what kind of influence a problem to get rid of a cooperator to Japan had on a Chinese alumnus from Japanese school in the chapter.

II In the chapter, I pay attention to the Chinese alumnus of the Port Arthur college of engineering as a Chinese alumnus taking "gray zone" and inspect how I faced China society after the war.

III In the chapter, I inspect the background where a Chinese alumnus opened an alumnus network in in 1980's.

IV In the chapter, I inspect it about the interchange of a Japanese alumnus and the Chinese alumnus.
